LAST year the Legislature of New Jersey was Democratic by nine majority. This year it is Republican by seven.

THE Globe-Democrat says there were fifty thousand voters in St. Louis who did not go to the polls on the 5th, and that, if they had voted, that city would have given a Republican majority of twenty to thirty thousand.

A WAIL comes from Democratic organs, begging us not to form a solid North. When one section of country combines to defeat another, it is but right that the agressive party should be met by a similar combination. To all appearances the South will be met by a foeman worthy of its steel.

The Party that Defeated Governor Curtin.

Last week's Watchman asks Hon. Seth H. Yocum to vote for a Democratic organization of the next House of Representatives because, as it says, he was elected by Democratic votes. In order to show the strength of this great Meek party, which makes such pretentious claims, we give an analysis of the vote in the district. Hoyt received 9,478 votes, Mason 3,620, Dill 14,244. Mr. Yocum, all will allow, received the combined Hoyt and Mason vote, which was 13,098, leaving Dill's majority over both 1,146. Now, this majority was all Mr. Curtin had any reason to expect. He did not ask Republicans or Nationals to vote for him. He nor his friends did not expect their support, and if Governor Curtin had received his full party vote he could have had only 1,146 majority over his opponent, Mr. Yocum. Add the majority Mr. Yocum had to the majority Mr. Curtin should have had, and we have 1,219; so to effect this change it required just 610 votes from the Democratic party. Yocum's vote—the Republican and National combined—was 13,098, so our readers can see what a small fraction of this vote it is that through the Watchman would ask our new Congressman to bow to its behests.

This analysis also shows the small following which Meek has. No one claims that outside of this county he has any influence, for he has asked of the other counties for several years past the nomination for Senator, and they refused to give it to him, notwithstanding Centre county was entitled to the nomination. As soon as our county presented the name of Mr. Alexander as our candidate, he received the nomination without trouble. By this it will be seen that Meek's followers are only the disaffected Democrats of this county, which, by this showing, cannot exceed two hundred. This, then, is the full strength of this boastful Democratic leader, and it is by no means probable that he could even control this following in any future election.

We have allowed that Mr. Meek was able to control two hundred votes in this county; but the figures will not show so favorable for him. Hoyt received in this county 2,059, Mason 1,466, Dill 3,827—Dill's majority over both, 302. This was all the majority Curtin was entitled to in Centre county. His majority was 49, which, subtracted from what he should have had, leaves 253. To effect this change would require 126 Democratic votes, and one not to vote at all. This, then, is the true strength of this Democratic schism; this is the Meek party of Centre county; this is what the Watchman calls "that large element in the Democratic party" to whom Mr. Yocum "owes his election." What a wonderful power these 126 Democrats will be in future contests! How our future Congressmen should tremble and bow down before them! They are "we, the people!" It was they that did the business, and if he ever wants to go to Congress again he had better do as they would like to have him do. The other thousands of his supporters are of no account, and if things do not go right in the future, just look out or something will drop, or bust, or—well perhaps the Meek party will bust, and then what will become of the nation? Subsidies will be granted to railroads without distinction; members of the Legislature will set up jobs like the Big Sandy Run arrangement, and there will be no one hundred and twenty-six Democratic soverigns with Meek at the head to order a halt. Oh, dear, what are we all coming to? When Meek and his party bust, may the Lord have mercy on us!

THE locomotive "Gem," of the Philadelphia and Reading road, exploded last Saturday in front of the Mahanoy depot, killing five persons outright and injuring others. The explosion was most terrific and fatal in its effects.

Come Over.

The Watchman of last week is very anxious to have Congressman elect Yocum come over to the Democracy, or to the small faction of that party to which its editor has allied himself, viz: those "who were dissatisfied with the nomination of Governor Curtin and who refused to be bound by that nomination." It thinks that this little handful of men should have all the credit of this victory, and that our new Congressman should ignore the great bulk of his supporters and try to heal the wounds of a few men who voted for him, not because they wanted him elected, but, as they themselves say "to reduce Curtin's majority," and prove to the Democratic party that Meek was a great man in that organization, whose wishes it would not be safe to ignore. But the result has proven too much. The vote in the other counties shows that other influences were at work, and all that Meek contributed to the general result was but as "a drop in the bucket." Take Yocum's Democratic supporters in the whole district and they are but a contemptible item of the whole body, and the Watchman calls this little handful of men "the element that secured his election." They and the Greenbackers together would not constitute one-quarter of his supporters.

If Mr. Yocum wants to represent the men who elected him he will have to act with the Republicans in all important party measures, and vote for a Republican organization of the House.

Again, when these men voted for Mr. Yocum they knew he was not a Democrat. The supposition is, therefore, that they did not want a Democrat elected; if they had they would have voted for Gov. Curtin, whose Democracy no one had successfully assailed. If they did not want a Democrat then they must have wanted either a Republican or a National, and that is just what they have got. The editor of the Watchman must not think that the average voter would be actuated by the same motive which controlled him in his opposition to his party nomination. The people are honest and vote for men to represent the principles which they wish to see carried out. If any man voted for Yocum to carry out Democratic party principles, he certainly took a good deal on trust. For those of our readers who do not see the Watchman, we give a speciment of its reasoning on this matter. It says:

> Now, we have reason to believe that Mr. Yocum recognizes, to a certain extent, the fact that he owes his present proud position, in great part, to the element of which we have spoken, and that he feels grateful for their good opinion and assistance. We have therefore reason to expect that in the contest for the organization of the next House of Representatives, there being no possible chance for a Greenback administration, he will cast his influence and his vote for the Democratic caucus nominees for Speaker and for the other offices—at least for the more important of them. In his card printed in the Watchman the week before the election, Mr. Yocum distinctly stated that he was under no pledge to the Republican party, but that, on the question of finances, he was a Greenbacker and fully committed to the doctrine of that party. With the Republican party in Congress, therefore, he cannot affiliate, because their financial principles are diametrically opposed to those of the Greenbackers, and as the latter will not be strong enough in the House to make a show for the organization, Mr. Yocum will be entirely free to act with the Democrats, and we have but little doubt that he will do so, because upon the engraftment of Democratic ideas and principles upon the legislation of the country, depends the overthrow of John Sherman's damnable financial poltcy, and the substitution of such measures as will relieve and benefit the people. To this add the natural feelings of gratefulness that Mr. Yocum must necessarily entertain towards the element that secured his election, and the fact that by acting with the Democratic party he can make himself and his own Greenback party felt in the legislation of the country, and we think we may be reasonably confident that he will be friendly to and work for a Democratic organization and Democratic measures.

Mr. Yocum has been all his life a Republican. When the money question is taken out of politics, as it will be at the assembling of the new Congress, he will be left without a party. We, as do all his supporters, fully expect to see him act up to the principles he has always professed to love and honor. He is a Republican at heart to-day, was elected by the Republicans, and can not act with the Democratic party without violating every principle of honor and justice. This being a fact we can fully endorse the closing paragraph of the Watchman's article, which says:

> In conclusion, hoping that Congressman Yocum fully appreciates the situation, that he recognizes in the people the Warwicks who do the making and the unmaking, and that he will do his whole duty conscientiously and with all his might, we are content to await the developments of his future career. He goes to Congress untrammeled and unpledged, and with the good wishes of his entire constituency. His chance is a good one. Let us hope that we shall not be disappointed in our estimate of his ability to improve it to his own honor and the good of the people whom he represents.

Our readers will readily see the hint which Meek throws out as an inducement to Mr. Yocum to go over. Come over, Yocum, come over, cries Meek, and we will re-elect you to Congress when your term expires. The foolishness of this will readily be seen when we consider that it only took about six hundred disaffected Democrats in the district to accomplish the defeat of Curtin. How powerless this little faction will be to elect anybody cannot be doubted. Meek and his little party will be powerless in the future, and its leader's coming political history can be written in two words—"gone up."

How South Carolina Was Carried.

Hon. E. W. M. Mackey, Republican candidate for Congress in Charleston, describes how he was beaten:

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 7, 1878.

"MY DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 5th inst. received. As you anticipated, the Democrats have counted me out. That I received a majority of at least 5,000 there is no doubt; yet O'Connor is given by the election officers a majority of 7,000, and perhaps it will be more. How it has been done I shall tell you, and I hope you will publish the facts in every paper you can:

"In the first place, in the appointment of managers of elections, the Democratic Commissioners of Elections in the several counties in this District absolutely refused to appoint a single Republican manager throughout the district, so that we were compelled to vote without a single election officer to represent us in the entire district. It is true we had a United States Supervisor appointed at each poll, and though the Democratic managers at most of the polls admitted them into the polling places, yet they threw every obstacle they could in their way, and in no instance would they allow them to exercise any authority save to stand by and witness the voting. In some instances the authority of the supervisors were entirely ignored. In one case the managers ordered the supervisor out of the polling place, and upon his refusing to go they ordered the State constables to eject him, which they did. This was at Mt. Pleasant poll in this county. At the Palmetto engine house in Ward Three of this city, the supervisor was severely beaten by the Democratic voters and driven away from the polls.

"In this city the Democratic managers of elections arbitrarily refused to at least 2,000 colored voters the right to vote. Unless a colored man was known to one of the managers of election he was refused the right to vote unless he could bring witnesses to prove where he resided. Many were turned off under the pretext that they were not twenty-one years of age, or rather that the managers were doubtful of it.

"At the last session of the Legislature, the two voting precincts in St. Andrew's Parish was abolished, and 900 colored voters of that section of the county left without a polling place. The parish is only separated from the city by the Ashley river, and used to be connected with Charleston by a bridge, which you will probably recollect was burned at the evacuation of the city by the rebels. The people crossed over to the city of Charleston for the purpose of voting, but the Democratic managers would not receive their votes, though the city of Charleston was the only place where they could vote. The Legislature also abolished all the voting places on the State road between Charleston and Summerville, and yet when the people came to Charleston to vote, the Democratic managers denied them the privilege, telling them to go and vote where they lived, although they knew full well that there were no polling place where they resided.

"Notwithstanding all these outrages, the Republicans carried this county by at least 4,000 majority, but to their utter surprise, when the ballot-boxes were opened at the various polls, the boxes were found to contain in most cases several hundred more ballots than were names on the poll list. Out of the thirty polls in this county, at twenty of them the ballots were largely in excess of the names on the poll list. Every ballot-box was stuffed with tickets of the kind I enclose: [The ticket is of tissue paper with the names printed upon it, 'For Governor, Wade Hampton,' etc.] These tickets were not circulated during the election, but had been printed by the Democratic Executive Committee and distributed amongst the managers only. The regular Democratic ticket, as well as the Republican ticket, was five times as large. In most instances, especially where very few Democratic votes were cast, the managers, after counting the ballots and ascertaining the excess, returned them to the ballot-box, but were careful to leave them unfolded and proceeded to draw out the number of ballots in excess. They were careful, however, to draw out none of those small tickets, but in every instance the large Republicans ballots were drawn out and destroyed.

"At the Mt. Pleasant poll 482 Republican ballots were thus drawn out and destroyed, and this poll, where the Republicans had voted five to one against the Democrats, was made to give a Democratic majority of 326.

"The most outrageous cases of ballot-box stuffing occurred at the two polls in ward three of this city. At the poll known as the Palmetto Engine House, one of the managers, W. L. Daggett, the foreman of the News and Courier job printing office, stuffed 3,500 of these little tickets in the box after the poll was closed. The managers, finding that there were 3,569 ballots in the box, declined to throw out any, but counted them all, and returned the vote of that poll as 461 for Mackey and 3,108 for O'Connor. At the other polls in this ward the same act was performed, and the managers returned 121 for Mackey and 1,866 for O'Connor, so that one ward out of the eight in the city was made to give a majority of 4,392 votes for O'Connor. The utter impossibility of voting 3,569 persons at one poll in the space of twelve hours need hardly be argued. As the managers swore each voter separately, and in many cases consumed three or four minutes questioning some voters, it is safe to say that the average time consumed in voting each man was one minute, which would allow 720 votes to be polled, provided there was a continuous stream of voters during the twelve hours the polls were opened. Yet at this poll the managers make a return under oath that 3,569 persons voted in the space of twelve hours. By this method Charleston City is made to give O'Connor a majority of 6,627, or a majority larger than the entire Democratic vote of the city.

"Throughout this county and the entire district the boxes were stuffed in the same way, not only in Charleston, but in Clarendon. Not satisfied with stuffing the ballot-boxes, the Democrats, finding it impossible to stuff the ballot-box at the Washington engine house, in Ward Six, because of the vigilance of the United States Supervisor, put out the lights, and stole the box and destroyed it, because I had a majority of about 500 there. On Edisto Island, where 1,000 Republican voters reside, and where the Democrats have only about 40 to 50 votes, the Democratic Commissioners failed to open the polls, thus actually disfranchising these voters."

"It is useless writing any more of these disgusting details. I see no remedy for the wrongs we are compelled to submit to. The publication of them I am afraid will do little good; but still publish them far and wide, so the world may know to what crimes the respectable Democrats of South Carolina will descend. The inmates of the South Carolina Penitentiary would not be guilty of the acts committed on Tuesday by the Democrats of this State.

Yours truly,
E. W. M. MACKEY."

THE Lewistown Gazette last week reviewed the late Congressional campaign. In speaking of Yocum's majority in Union, it says: "The majority there was beyond all expectations, and the vote strongly inclines us to the opinion that Dill and his friends traded off Curtin in order to make a good show at home, and we are confirmed in this opinion by the testimony of one who was on the ground in Union county until noon of election day, who says that the friends of Dill and Hoffa, (the latter running for the legislature against Mr. Wolfe,) were ready to trade any and everything else for votes for both or either. It may be it was done under the belief that Curtin was safe anyhow, but be it as it may no more fitting retribution than the result could have been asked for by the Republicans."

Poetry.

"I WOULDN'T—WOULD YOU?"

When a lady is seen at a party or ball—
Her eyes vainly turn'd in fits of conceit,
As she peers at the gentlemen, fancying all
Are enchain'd by her charms, and would kneel at her feet,
With each partner coquetting—to nobody true,
I wouldn't give much for her chances—would you?

When an upstart is seen on the flags strutting out,
With his hat cock'd aslant, and a glass in his eye;
And thick clouds of foul smoke he stands puffing about,
As he inwardly says, "What a noble am I,"
While he twists his moustache for the ladies to view—
I wouldn't give much for his senses!—would you?

When a wife runs about at her neighbors to pry,
Leaving children at home, unprotected to play;
Till she starts back in haste at the sound of their cry,
And finds they've been fighting while mother's away,
Sugar eaten—panes broken—the wind blowing through;
I wouldn't give much for her comfort—would you?

When a husband is idle, neglecting his work,
In the public-house snarling with quarrelsome knaves;
When he gambles with simpletons, drinks like a Turk,
While the good wife at home for the poor children slaves,
And that home is quite destitute, painful to view;
I wouldn't give much for his morals—would you?

When a boy at his school, lounging over his seat,
Sits rubbing his head, and neglecting his book;
While he fumbles his pockets for something to eat,
Yet pretendeth to read when his master may look,
Though he boasts to his parents how much he can do;
I wouldn't give much for his progress—would you?

When a man who is driving a horse on the road,
Reins and whips the poor brute with unmerciful hand,
Whilst it willingly strives to haste on with its load,
Till with suff'ring and working it scarcely can stand;
Though he may be a man, and a wealthy one too,
I wouldn't give much for his feelings—would you?

When a master who lives by his laborers' skill,
Hoards his gold up in the thousands, still craving for more,
Though poor are his toilers, he grindeth them still,
Or unfeelingly turns them away from his door;
Though he banketh his millions with claims not a few;
I wouldn't give much for his conscience—would you?

When a tradesman his neighbor's fair terms will decry,
And keeps puffing his goods at a wonderful rate;
Sells at prices at which no fair trader can buy;
Though customers flock to him early and late;
When a few months have fled, and large bills become due,
I wouldn't give much for his credit—would you?

When in murderous deeds man's hands are imbued,
Tho' revenge is his plea, and the crime is conceal'd,
The severe sting of conscience will quickly intrude,
And the mind, self-accusing, can never be heal'd;
When the strong arm of justice sets out to pursue,
I would'nt give much for his freedom—would you?

When a husband and wife keep their secrets apart,
Not a word to my spouse about this or on that;
When a trifle may banish the pledge of their heart,
And he naggles—she naggles—both contradict flat,
Tho' unequaled their love when its first blossom blew;
I wouldn't give much for their quiet—would you?

When a man who has lived here for none but himself,
Feels laid on his strong frame the cold hand of death,
When all fade away—wife, home, pleasures and pelf,
And he yields back to God both his soul and his breath:
As up to the judgment that naked soul flew—
I wouldn't give much for his Heaven—would you?

Our Story Teller.

Harley's Chances.

Previous to the great financial crash of 1837, Joshua Martin was deemed the most prosperoos merchant in the then frontier city of St. Joseph, Wisconsin. He was noted for his sterling integrity and stainless character; and, if he reveled in wealth, he did not parade it before the people.

He came to St. Joseph in 1831, and at once began to amass a fortune. Those who pretended to know said that the merchant operated in Eastern stocks, and that the bulk of his wealth was staked among the bulls and bears of New York.

The memorable crash of that decade which embrace the dates above written ruined Joshua Martin. He had staked everything in Eastern securities, and he suddenly found himself a comparative beggar. Poor, blinded man! He could save nothing from the wreck, and he sat among the ruins of his fortunes, like Marius among those of Carthage. Forced to relinquish the imposing residence which, in his eagerness to delve deeper into stock, he had mortgaged away, he was obliged to remove his family, consisting of a wife and one daughter, to an humble dwelling; and from the date of that removal the Martins were no more mentioned in the fashionable society of "St. Jo."

The troubles of the bankrupt's family did not end here. The blow killed the merchant. Though a strong man, he could not bear up under his loss. If a few thousands had been taken from him at intervals, he might have recovered and regained his lost position; but the destruction of tens of thousands at one sweep of the waves overwhelmed him. He sank rapidly and died, leaving his family to buffet the waves of the world and to do the best they could among those who had once knelt at their feet, but who now did not deign to recognize them in the streets.

Mother and daughter took quite readily to their new life. They sold much of the gorgeous furniture which had ornamented their late home, but kept the piano and a few other pieces which Maumee loved.

Maumee Martin had grown to bewitching womanhood during her life in St. Joseph, and her accomplishments rivaled her beauty. After the death of her father—after her transformation into the child of a despised bankrupt—she did not shrink from the duties that fell to her lot.

She must live; she must earn her daily bread; and a week after the change of life we find Maumee Martin plying the seamstress' needle, or giving lessons in music to a few children whose parents sent them to her because she taught cheaper than regular preceptors.

By and by the house which they occupied was sold over their head; but the new owner—a great, middle-aged, but somewhat handsome, man—assured them that they should not be turned out.

The new owner was a stranger in St. Joseph, but immediately purchasing the property above mentioned, he opened a commission store, and at once drew a thriving patronage about him.

Andreas Harley, for such was his name, came often to the house of the Martins, and reports went abroad to the effect that he intended to wed the bankrupt's widow.

"My chances are decidedly good," said the merchant one evening, as he bent over the counting-room desk. "The girl appears coy, but she will come about in time. People think that I'm after the widow, but I never entertained a thought in that direction. The beauty of the daughter would draw the widow's most devoted adorer to her side. That girl's a beauty. She must become Mrs. Harley; she shall! Yes," after a long pause, and as he slowly turned from the desk, "Harley, your chances are good—decidedly good. You own their own, and in the depth of winter you can turn them out, if Maumee becomes stubborn and says 'No.'"

He was the sole occupant of the counting-room, but as he crossed the threshold and turned the lock the door he heard a footstep and voice down the dark aisle.

"Hold on a moment, Mr. Harley. Reopen the counting-room door, please. I wish a few words with you." He did not reply, but stepped into the cozy counting-room closely followed by Philip Lee.

"Well?" he inquired, turning suddenly upon the handsome young clerk. "Speak quickly, Lee; I must be going."

"All I desire to say is that some of the funds of the house have mysteriously disappeared."

"What?" cried the merchant. "Say that again, boy."

The young man repeated the words, and added:

"One afternoon, while your were absent East, I placed $950 in the safe, and the following morning $45 were missing."

"You have committed an error in counting, possibly."

"If I cannot count money correctly when it is before my eyes, I deserve to be thrown out of employment," said the youth, in an insulted air. "Several times during your absence have I noticed the peculation of some unknown person."

"Who had access to the safe?"

"I held the keys, sir," answered Philip, quickly. "I have not missed them for a single moment. But the safe has been opened by keys."

Andreas Harley dropped his head in deep thought, while the clerk stepped to his desk and summed up various columns of figures on the back of an envelope which he drew from and inner pocket.

"Three hundred dollars have been purloined within four weeks," said Lee, turning from his desk.

"It staggers me," returned Harley. "But we will watch the thief, and if we catch him he shall have his reward."

The merchant began buttoning his great coat, and the clerk walked from the room. Andreas Harley heard him close and lock the outside door of the store, and then stepped toward the desk, his dark eyes fixed upon an object which lay thereon.

It was an envelope upon which Philip Lee had been figuring.

"I'll look at his figures," he murmured; but the next moment he turned the envelope and stared at the superscription. It was merely "Philip Lee, Present," but the chirography startled the merchant. Those delicately-formed letters he had encountered before. And, after closing the counting-room door, he half fearfully drew the letter from its hiding place.

For a moment his eyes remained fixed upon the brief communication, when he started from the desk, while something like an oath fell from his lips.

"So, Miss Maumee Martin," he cried, hurling the letter to the floor, and gazing angrily at it, "you possess a love beside Andreas Harley. Girl—woman—I will not submit to this. If you prefer the employe to the employer, you must hunt another home. But, by heavens! you shall not wed him as he stands before the world now. He has held the keys to the safe. He has robbed it! The crime shall be fastened upon him. Harley's chances do not look so bright now; but I fancy that after a little sternness will bring the girl to terms. She's a beggar now, almost. Does she want to marry another?"

Then he picked the letter up, read it again, and placed it on the desk where the youth had left.

The contents of the missive did not amount to much. It was merely a reply to one which, during business hours, Philip Lee had sent her; but the appellation of "Dear Philip" had opened a mine of information to Andreas Harley. He had never encountered his clerk at the home of the Martins. They had spoken of him but once or twice, and then casually; and he had suspected nothing until the letter was thrown in his way.

Several days of quiet preceded the bursting of the storm.

Clerk and employer encountered each other often, but no unusual words passed between them. It was evident that Andreas Harley was displeased at something, but he took care to conceal his displeasure as much as possible.

The night following the one that witnessed the scene in the counting-room described above witnessed the robbery of the safe.

This time $80 were abstracted, and Andreas Harley called one of the clerks, Theodore Mason, to his desk, and acquainted him with the facts.

Mason, upon being asked if he suspected anybody, said:

"Lee."

The merchant started at the announcement, but a flush of triumph stole to his temples.

"I saw Lee standing by the store last night at 11, while I was going home from the club," continued Mason, evincing an eagerness to unburden himself of something that preyed upon his mind. "He did not speak as I passed him, but perhaps he did not see me, as it was raining and he carried his umbrella low—a little lower than was necessary, I fancy."

"I am on the right trail," said Andres Harley, exulting'y. "And yet," feigning a sorrowful tone, "I do not want to think the purloiner is Philip Lee."

"Nor do I," said Mason, "but circumstances condemn him. I could tell you more, Mr. Harley, but I do not like to speak against Philip."

Andreas Harley persuaded Theodore Mason to unburden his mind further concerning Philip Lee, and that night the acused clerk found himself in the clutches of the law.

The arrest was so quietly conducted that the public was unaware of the transaction until the morning papers placed it before their eyes.

Flushed with triumph, Andreas Harley, on the morning following Philip Lee's arrest, hastened to the home of the Martins. He often made such calls on his way to the store, and this morning he found the bankrupt's family pleased to see him.

Maumee was in the parlor preparing for her class in music, and Andreas Harley thought she looked lovelier than ever in her plain dress and unsettled hair.

He did not doff his overcoat; he said he had not long to stay; he had stepped in to impart a piece of information which might interest the tenants of his house.

The merchant's daughter wondered what the news might be, as Andreas Harley drew a morning journal from his pocket.

"I am sorry that I have occasioned this paragraph," he said, touching the top of a column of city news; "but I could not help it."

Maumee took the paper, and, in a moment, mastered the account of Philip's arrest.

"Mr. Harley, can you be mistaken?" she asked, when she looked from the paper with palid face.

"No, Maumee; the proofs are convincing against him," he answered, and then, while the fair girl's head lay on her bosom, and her eyes, swimming in tears, fell on the floor, he left his chair and came to her side.

"Girl,' he said, "is Philip Lee anything to you?"

Maumee quickly drew her hand from his grasp and started to her feet.

"He is something to me," she cried, facing the merchant, through whose scheming she seemed to have seen instantly. "He is much to me—and more, Andreas Harley, he never robbed your safe?"

The merchant for some moments did not know what to say, but at last he found his tongue.

"Girl, he is guilty, I greatly regret to say; but you can save him."

"How, Mr. Harley?"

"By becoming my wife! I can liberate him, and on such conditions the doors of the jail shall be open to him."

Fire flashed in Maumee Martin's dark eyes.

"Andreas Harley," she cried "yonder is the door that leads into the street," and with quivering fingers she pointed to the portal.

"This house is mine."

"I care not."

"I can turn you out into the snow."

"There is the door, I wish to live under such bounty as yours no longer."

"I will not go until you promise to be my wife," said the merchant, sternly.

At that moment the widow entered the room, and Maumee sprung into the chamber which her mother had just vacated.

An instant later she reappeared, bearing a musket of quaint and clumsy workmanship.

"Go, Andreas Harley," she cried, in a determined tone. "Mother, please open the door for the plotter."

Wondering what had transpired to mar the friendship existing between Maumee and the merchant, Mrs. Martin opened the parlor door, and Andreas Harley, with clenched hands and vengeful visage, strode from the room.

No sooner had he departed than Maumee dropped the gun and threw herself into her mother's arms.

"Oh, mother! mother!" she cried, "how swiftly one misfortune follows another. But," and she lifted her head, "Philip shall not be condemned! He shall not fall the victim of a conspiracy—never!"

Yet that day the Martins were driven from beneath the roof which had sheltered them since their first great misfortune, and they found a temporary abode with Philip Lee's widowed mother.

Maumee soon learned the particulars of her lover's arrest and preliminary examination, and the following day she purchased a pistol with a portion of her musical earnings.

When night came she made her way to Theodore Mason's chamber, and startled the clerk by her abrupt appearance. The young man's face assumed a deathly hue, and Maumee's mental ejaculation was:

"I've found the right man."

She knew much of Theodore Mason's habits, and she judged him to be the robber of the merchant's safe. At first he denied the charge, but when he saw the pistol clutched by the girl's fair, white hands, he changed his tune.

He wrote his confession on paper, and Maumee called a young lawyer into the room to witness the signature. The confession implicated Andreas Harley. The clerk had been detected in his sin by the merchant, who had promised to pardon him if he would aid him to convict Philip, who, in time, wadded Maumee Martin.

Young Mason was permitted to escape, and when Harley heard of the confession he hastily disposed of his store, and followed him. The guilty clerk left behind him the skeleton keys with which he had opened the safe, and they still hang in the luxurious home of Philip Lee, now one of Chicago's merchant princes.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Fashion Notes.

"Marigold," one of the many shades of yellow, is much in favor.

Spirl bands are now largely worn instead of the plain round bangle.

Birds of all kinds, and their plumage, are much used for house decorations.

Rustic sticks with the bark varnished are seen on some of the handsomest parasols.

Old-fashioned steel bead sachels are again worn as chatelaines, in rivalry of the velvet pockets.

The Rembrandt hat, of white plush with large white plumes, is intended for blondes for dress occasions.

"Fleur de soupre," better known as "sulphur color," is one of the most fashionable colors this season.

New specie-holders are of crocheted silk in bright colors, and just large enough around to hold a silver dollar.

Brussels net is a new material for evening dresses; it is shown embroidered in leaves of pale drab and orange.

The latest extravagance in stockings is to have them in pale-tinted silk, embroidered in frosted silverv leaves and seed pearls.

A beautiful material for evening dresses is the new jasper silk, which is, in color, a combination of delicate colors and shadings.

A pretty finish for the bottom of an overdress is to cut it in squares and fasten up one edge of the square with a tiny bow of ribbon.

Gold bands, dotted with jet flowers, are worn with the Roman coiffure. A long, narrow band is over the brow, and a broad one further back serves as a comb.

Spanish lace is extremely popular as a trimming for cashmere mantelettes, and much narrow ribbon renders this trimming effective. It is usually gathered, while French lace is side-pleated.

Fringes are of the most dressy and elaborate kinds. Some have double rows of tassels, with jets and moss tufts intermingled, and others are of lustrous silk as soft as chenille, made like wooden caterpillar fringe.

Traveling cloaks for ladies almost envelop the dress, are double-breasted, cut stylishly in the back and have but one dart in each front. The adjustable collar that accompanies such a design is composed of three collars in one, to be worn or removed at pleasure. The necessary binding is the only appearance of trimming which it presents.

Not Guilty, but Must Return the Sheep.

Apropos of the verdict in the Thisleton case, at Los Angeles, which cleared the defendant of libel, while the jury signed a paper declaring the prosecutor pure and free from the charge in the libel, we are reminded of a trial that took place in Justice Wilson's court at San Diego. A man accused of stealing sheep was on trial. After the evidence was all in the jury retired, and as in the Thisleton case, stood eleven for acquittal and one for guilty. Finally the twelfth man agreed to join the others, provided they would sign a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty, but request that he return the sheep." Pertinent to the reason assigned by the Thisleton jury, that "they did not wish to put the county to further expense," we have another verdict by a San Diego jury in a case tried before the same Justice. A negro woman had sued a man for assault with a stone. The accused was put upon the stand and admitted that he had thrown the stone. Notwithstanding, the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. And still another instance of a peculiar verdict is contained in the following, which was tried before the same Judge. A citizen of San Diego brought suit aginst a German neighbor for killing a dog, and when the counsel began questioning the teutonic citizen, he immediately replied, "Yes, shentlemen, I kilt der dog, but der can't proof't on me." The jury retired and brought in a verdict of not guilty—not having evidence sufficient to convict him. In conversation afterward, the members of the jury defended this curious verdict on the ground that taxes were already too high and they did not wish to put the county to additional expense.

Scribner for December.

The December Scribner contains fiction by four of the leading American novelists, viz.: "The Great Deadwood mystery," by Bret Harte, a complete story in a semi-satiracal vein and including one of the most interesting scenes in his writings; Mrs Burnett's "Haworth's" (the second installment, which is full of action and increased literary strength); "An Irish Heart," a pathetic Oldport story by T. W. Higginson, and the fifth installment of Mr. Boyeson's "Falconberg."

The illustrations of Dr. Brewer's fourth paper on "Bird Architecture" (The Humming-Birds) are regarded by the managers of the Monthly as among the most exquisite yet published in the Magazine. The drawings are, as usual, by Mr. Riordan, the engravings by Mr. Marsh, Mr. Cole, Mr. King and others. The text is written in an untechnical manner and describes many curious characteristics of American and other humming-birds. "The Cliff-Dwellers," by Emma Chamberlin Hardacre, embodies the latest discoveries regarding the ruins of the San Juan region (some of which are situated in the rock at the hight of 700 feet), and is written under the sanction of Professor Hayden. Graphic drawings by Thomas Moran supplement the text. "Caribou Hunting" is described in a personal narrative by Charles C. Ward, whose "Moose Hunting" a year ago will be remembered by sportsmen; the author and Henry Sandham furnish the drawings. "The Douglas Squirrel of California" has found a friend in John Muir, who writes with enthusiasm and rare knowledge of this little forest-planter. Mr. Bolles draws some Indian boys using the Douglass as a target for archery practice. There is also a sketch of "Dora D'Istria," the eminent philanthropist and social writer of Wallachia, with a portrait after Schiovonni. The serials are also illustrated.

St. Nicholas,
SCRIBNER'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE
For Girls and Boys.

An Ideal Children's Magazine.

Messrs. Scribner & Co., in 1873, began the publication of ST. NICHOLAS, an Illustrated Magazine for Girls and Boys, with Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge as editor. Five years have passed since the first number was issued, and the magazine has won the highest position. It has a monthly circulation of OVER 50,00 COPIES.

It is published simultaneously in London and New York, and the transatlantic recognition is almost as general and hearty as the American. Although the progress of the magazine has been a steady advance, it has not reached its editor's ideas of best, because her ideal continually outruns it, and the magazine as swiftly follows after. To-day ST. NICHOLAS stands

Alone in the World of Books:

The New York Tribune has said of it: "ST. NICHOLAS has reached a higher platform, and commands for its service wider resources in art and letters than any of its predecessors or contemporaries." The London Literary World says: "There is no magazine for the young that can be said to equal this choice production of Scribner's press."

Good Things for 1878-9.

The arrangements for literary and art contributions for the new volume—the sixth—are complete, drawing from already favorite sources, as well as from promising new ones. Mr. Frank R. Stockton's new serial story for boys, will run through the twelve monthly parts—beginning with the number for November, 1878, the first of the volume—and will be illustrated by James E. Kelly. The story is one of travel and adventure in Florida and the Bahamas. For the girls, a continued tale,

"A JOLLY FELLOWSHIP,"

"Half a Dozen Housekeepers,"

by Katharine D. Smith, with illustrations by Frederick Dielman, begins in the same number; and a fresh serial by Susan Coolidge, entitled "Eyebright," with plenty of pictures, will be commenced early in the volume. There will also be a continued fairy-tale called written by Julian Hawthorne, and illustrated by Alfred Fredericks. About the other familiar features of ST. NICHOLAS, the editor preserves a good-humored silence, content, perhaps, to let her five volumes already issued, prophesy concerning the sixth, in respect to short stories, pictures, poems, humor, instructive sketches, and the lure and lore of "Jack-in-the-Pulpit," the "Very Little Folks" department, and the "Letter-box," and "Riddle-box."

EDITOR'S TABLE.

St. Nicholas for November

Begins the sixth volume of the magazine with seventy-two pages and fifty-two pictures filled with enchantment for the boys and girls.

Two new serials begin in this number. One, for boys, is by Frank R. Stockton and has the inviting title, "A Jolly Fellowship." Its first installment describes the voyage of two boys to one of the Southern States, where the scene of the story is laid; and the seven telling illustrations are by James E. Kelly. Further on in the number the youngsters will find a short biographical account of Frank R. Stockton, with a portrait, which will pleasantly satisfy their curiosity as to this favorite author. The other serial for girls, is by Katharine D. Smith, and this first part has three pictures; two of them by Frederick Dielman, are unusually fine.

Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, the editor, herself contributes to this number the poem entitled "A Mistake," illustrated by Addie Ledyard; and a paper called "Monkeys and Dogs to the Front," giving a lively account of some remarkable trained dogs and monkeys, with fourteen capital pictures by L. Hopkins.

One of San Francisco's curious new wire-cable railroads is described and thoroughly illustrated under the title "Towed by Rail," the pictures being from photographs taken especially for this article.

There are five complete short stories all illustrated. The first one, "A Boy's Service," tells of the daring of a boy hero of the Vaudois mountains, during the religious persecutions carried on by Louis XIV, of France; the illustration, by Sol Eytinge, is used as the frontispiece to the number. Next comes "Who Told?" by Sarah Winter Kellogg, a story for girls with a fine picture by Walter Shilaw. Then follow, at intervals: "Handsome Hans," the history of a brave and beautiful war horse, with a fine illustration by Kelly; "The most thoroughly educated Young Lady in Miss Neal's School," a Thanksgiving story, by Hope Ledyard; and "The Poor Relations," a tale o the wonderful achievements of a shrewd and lucky dwarf, with a picture by Geo. F. Barnes.

Among the other attractions of the number, besides poems by Lucy Larcom, C. P. Cranch and others are: "The Three Wise Men," some funny verses humorously illustrated by Hopkins; "The Magician's Lesson," a short and striking play by G. B Bartlett; the usual large-print pages for the youngest readers; and "Jack-in-the-Pulpit," and the other departments.

Harper's Magazine for November.

Harper's Magazine for November beautifully concludes a beautiful volume.

The number opens with a bright little paper describing a "Free Kindergarten" in New York city, with exquisite pictures by Miss Curtis, of real children involved in the enchantments of Froebel's wonderful system.

As if to contrast the children of barbarism with those of civilization, the same number contains a very interesting and attractively illustrated paper by Henry W. Elliott on "Wild Babies," from Alaska to the Gulf.

The quaint style of Abbey's illustration has had no better illustration than in "The Fire Wizard," which Mrs. Helen S. Conant has happily rendered from an old German ballad. The typography of the poem is a part of the illustration itself.

To show the versatility of Abbey's pencil, ably supplemented by engraving of the highest order, we need only to turn from the German ballad to the three illustrations of "Melane," an excellent story by Clara M. Morse.

William Gibson's poem, "The Valley of the Yomouri," is finely illustrated by Moran.

With the single exception of the paper on David Teniers—fifth in the series of "Old Flemish Masters"—the illustrated articles in this number are all American. Mr. Benjamin's description of the Sea Islands off our South Atlantic coast is full of interesting legend and romance, associated with this unique congeries of islands, and is accompanied by twenty-four beautiful illustrations.

John Muir, who has often enriched the pages of Harper with his admirable studies of the Sierras, contributes to this number an exceedingly interesting and well-illustrated paper on the New Sequoia Forests of California.

Edwin P. Whipple's paper, "Some Recollections of Rufus Choate," will not disappoint the large number of readers who have been looking forward to its publication. It is full of characteristic anecdotes, giving also a critical estimate of this eminent lawyer and statesman.

Black's "Macleod of Dare" and Hardy's "The Return of the Native"—the two best serials of the year—are continued; and there are two excellent short stories beside "Melane," already mentioned. There are "Angelique's Novitiate," by Kate P. Osgood," and "The Thousand and Third Night," by G. D. Carrow.

Prof. Tayler Lewis's "The Power and Pathos of Euripides"—a posthumous paper—will prove of especial interest to all readers who admire the strong examples furnished by ancient classical literature.

The editorial departments are as interesting and entertaining as usual.

The Domestic Monthly.

The November number of this popular and always reliable fashion magazine presents a large and varied array of designs for both ladies' and children's costumes and individual garments, which are so admirable in point of style that they cannot fail to meet the approbation of every lady. In addition, there are also provided full reports of seasonable fabrics, trimmings, shoes, millinery, coiffures and lingerie, and articles on fancy and needle work, and other topics relating to the toilette. No department of fashion is neglected, and the reports are so full and comprehensive that it seems to us that no lady could wish, certainly not need, for further information or guidance in matters of fashion, at this particular season, than is provided in this number. It is profusely illustrated, and contains the usual handsome colored plate representing stylish costumes.

The usual high standard of the literary contents is fully sustained in this number. The principle attractions are a continuation of Mary Cecil Hay's serial, "Her Three Lovers," a charming sketch called "Cicely," a very sensible paper on "The Dignity of Labor for Women," and No. 2 in Eben E. Rexford's new series of "Flower Talks." In addition, there is some very choice poetry, the usual enjoyable miscellany, engaging small talk, instructive household department, critiques of new books, and the always entertaining contributions of the "Mosaic's Man."

The Domestic Monthly is published by Blake & Company, 849 Broadway, New York, at $1.50 per year, inclusice of pattern premium. Specimen copies, 15 cents.

Only Twelve Negroes Killed.

The moral sense of the North is becoming aroused: the late elections indicate that the outrage and murder perpetrated at the South are to be met by a positive rebuke from a solid North. The honest masses of the people have hearts not of stone, and can hear the wail of distress, and sympathize with outraged justice. Such reports as was presented to Governor Nichols, of Louisiana, by Colonel Zachary, in his report of the Tensas parish affair, carries a world of meaning, and true men can but experience a feeling of horror as they read the concluding sentence, which runs as follows: "Notwithstanding exaggerated reports, I could only succeed in finding that twelve negroes had been killed." What a trifling matter to these Southern savages is the fact that only twelve negroes were killed. This barbarian, Colonel Zachary, was no doubt surprised to find that so few negroes had been slain in the parish of Tensas. "Only twelve negroes killed!" Was there a fight? Were any of the white savages hurt? Did the negroes submit to be killed without resistance? So it would seem, for the Colonel does not report a single barbarian hurt. No one killed—"only twelve negroes." Under the circumstances had the killing been reversed, and twelve of the white savages been slain, we dare assert that the enormity of the act would have been less, and would have called for no sympathy from men of human hearts and feelings; for much as the shedding of human blood is to be deplored, the killing, then, would have resulted from the efforts of the colored men to assert the rights and privileges of their emancipated manhood, which should be held dear and defended even with life.

But the twelve dead negroes tell the story of outraged justice, and the heartless determination to destroy them. Ever since the war inaugurated by the South to perpetuate slavery has been decided against them, and the same rights held by others have been accorded to the colored men, they have been the objects of remorseless persecution by their more savage white neighbors. Bold and unlawful attempts have been constantly made to prevent them from exercising the rights which were bestowed upon them with their freedom.

The whites of the South have entrenched themselves in sneers, suspicions, cavils, slanders and in all the defences by which malice and stupidity shut out from themselves, and strive to shut out from others, the light that streams from a just and inevitable law. They have pursued their victims with a pertinacity of hate and rancor that has culminated in wide-spread intimidation and murder. When the general Government attempted to correct this evil, these contemptible savages whined piteously about bayonet rule—the rule which represented the authority of the Government against the knife of the assassin—until the present administration adopted the sentimental policy of pacification and reconciliation and withdrew the troops. The result of this action we have read in the past months, have read yesterday and can read to-day. One would have thought that with such a policy the Southern savage would have been content. But not so; with increased power has come increased arrogance, and the increased vindictiveness that has culminated in murder, pathetically expressed in the report, "only twelve negroes killed."

The Philadelphia Sunday Transcript, in an able article on the subject, concludes as follows: "Well may the wavering Occupant, in his better realization of a people who set themselves above the law, declare his 'Southern policy,' which has made such a state of things possible, a failure. Well may he call for the enforcement of the Federal law, that, paralyzed, now stands a mocking epitaph upon the slain.

"In spite of the clash and conflict, of interests and passion in politics in the North, there is sufficient clear perception left in the most excited masses of party antagonists to recognize in the truculent spirit of the 'Solid South,' and its apologists among us, who have become the petty tributaries to its snarling venom and spleen, the danger and its tendency to the reaffirmation of a prominent sectional right.

"Never again will the North stand motionless in the criminal apathy and imbecility which, under the last Democratic administration, permitted a part of the country deliberately to prepare for the destruction of the whole. The Republican party, which, in all its controversies, has had upon its side the right of conscience and the right of reason, asks now, upon the threshold of the repetition of these acts of defiance and illegality that heralded the event of 1861, the exercise of all the lawful authority to suppress them. They appeal for protection to the rights of all, white and black alike, and invoke—in no partisan sense—for the South as for the North, and for the East as for the West, the ample power of the law of the land."

CENTRE county now holds within its limits four political parties, namely: Republican, Democrat, National and Meekites. The last named polled at the last election one hundred and twenty-six votes out of a possible one hundred and twenty-seven. Like all new organizations, the Meekites are very boastful, and pretend that they are a terrible power for future good or evil. They are the party which pretends to be opposed to all subsidies for railroads. They want the public lands kept intact until they get into power, when they will start a big Sandy Run Improvement company out west somewhere in the alkali desert, and make business good for everybody, especially their able leader, Meek. Then they will give homes to poor men, with a beautiful farm and a salt mine on every tract.

PRESIDENT HAYES is reported to have said last week, in an interview with Senator Don Cameron and ex-Senator Chandler: "I am compelled to admit that my Southern policy has been a failure. The differences between the Administration and the political leaders in future will be abandoned, and united efforts will be made to strengthen the party for future success. In the South the parties arrested for violation of election laws will be prosecuted, and there will be a complete overhauling of officeholders. Efforts will be made to stimulate the independent movement in the South."

THE Watchman of last week indulges in a column and a half of advice to Congressman Yocum. His course in the councils of the nation has been clearly defined by Meek, who would be glad to dictate to him how he should vote in the organization of the House, on land grants, etc. We doubt not but that Mr. Yocum has a mind of his own—that he is capable of thinking for himself, and will pull through without the valuable counsel of our office-seeking brother.

GOVERNOR HARTRANFT has signed the death warrant of the famous Mollie Maguire, Jack Kehoe, who will be executed on the 18th of December. His Excellency also signed warrants for the execution on the same day of Charles Sharp and Jas. M'Donnell, Carbon county; Martin Bergen, Schuylkill county, and Alexander B. Sayers, Philadelphia. This action should settle "the old man at Harrisburg" fallacy.

A MAD bull dog suddenly appeared in the little village of Leiperville Chester Co., Monday afternoon of last week. All but a little child, who was playing on the street, got out of the animal's way. She was badly bitten in the leg. About twenty dogs belonging in the villiage were bitten, and some of them have since died. The dog disappeared as suddenly as it came. No one knows to whom it belongs.

ONLY twelve negroes killed! This is the report of Colonel Frank Zachary, who was sent by Governor Nichols as special agent to Tensas parish to report the true condition of affairs thereabouts. He says that notwithstanding exaggerated reports from Tensas he could only succeed in finding that twelve negroes had been killed. Isn't that enough reconstruction for anybody?

WE are ready for resumption! We have nothing to resume on, nothing to exchange for gold, and nothing that indicates much botheration so far as we are concerned. Hard-pan has been reached.

SUMMER resorts appear to be doomed to destruction by fire, no less than three having been devastated within a short time—first, Cape May; next, Minnequa, and last, Atlantic City.

AN attempt was made a few days since to assassinate King Humbert, of Italy. His Majesty escaped with a slight wound.

WHEN McPherson, of the Press, strikes, McClure, of the Times, rises to explain.

A Solid South.

To a disinterested person, one who pays little or no attention to the events of the day, little change may have been noticed of the attitude recently assumed by the South. To him who keeps a watchful eye upon the daily history of our country, and knows of every important transaction that takes place within reach of the telegraph or press, a change must have been seen.

The spirit of reconciliation which was courted by the present administration has been spurned, and lawlessness reigns supreme in many commonwealths south of Mason and Dixon's line. After the inauguration of President Hayes, the cry of "military despotism" was acceded to, and troops were removed from the sunny land upon the condition that right and justice to all men, of every color, should be administered. This to our mind seemed a delusion from the beginning, but we do not regret of its having been given a fair and impartial trial. The results show conclusively that might can only make right—that a strict enforcement of the law, at all harzards, and at whatever cost, is the only safe and legitimate way of rectifying past wrongs. Proffered leniency having been rejected, patience having ceased to be a virtue, there remains but one method of preventing a recurrence of the gross outrages recently committed. The duty of President Hayes in the premises is plain, and we doubt not that his future Southern policy will be more in harmony with facts than fancies.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

EMPORIA, LYON CO., KANSAS,
October 26, 1878.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—We are having our first cold snap. Snow fell here to-day to the depth of about one inch.

The State Normal school, located here, was totally destroyed by fire about three o'clock this morning, with all its philosophical apparatus, school and household furniture. The fire originated from the spontaneous combustion of about seventy-five tons of coal stored in the basement of the building. The loss is variously estimated from $80,000 to $120,000 with no insurance.

The political outlook in this State is very encouraging to the Republicans. We expect to elect Col. St. John, our candidate for Governor, by about 35,000 majority. Elder Mitchell, the Green-back candidate, resides in this city. He is about the most extreme fiat money advocate that I have heard speak. The Democrats don't make much noise. Mr. Editor, Kansas has always been governed by the principles of the Republican party, and where is there a more prosperous State in the Union than she is? Contrast her, with the snug little sum in her treasury, with her sister, Missouri, and her empty treasury, where the Democracy have always ruled. We don't want any Democratic reform of that kind in ours. D. W. TIBBENS.

Fraud in Boggs Township.

The Democratic party, so much used to "Bulldozing" in the South, cannot refrain from it in the North. It becomes second nature with the members of the party to offset the "Outrages" in the South and to attract attention from the matter in that country. The Greenback and Democratic papers take up the cry of Bulldozing, etc., in Boggs township by the Republicans, not one word of which is true. If it was done at all, it was done in said township by Democrats. There was not one Republican mixed up in the affair at all if it was done. If the Greenback and Democratic papers will just please look to where Bulldozing is carried on and give us one little paragraph of condemnation of the same, it will be very refreshing and every one who reads will rejoice that Justice will, sooner or later, overtake those miserable wretches of boasted southern chivalry, who beat and maltreat poor defenceless people for opinion's sake.

In a word, the "Outrages" complained of in Boggs township, if they took place at all, were not committed by Republicans. JUSTICE.

Additional Local Matters.

Truth Will Prevail.

The Philadelphia Press prints an edition at nine o'clock in the evening, which it sells at depots and on trains leaving in the morning as a morning edition. This is a contemptible fraud, and travellers and others should be on their gaurd against such an imposition.—Watchman.

Why the editor of the Watchman allows himself to speak so regardlessly of the truth is more than we know or care about knowing. It is not our province to champion the cause of the Press, but we desire to correct this false statement by information received from an authentic source.

The first edition of the Press is printed between 11 and 12 o'clock, barely in time to catch the midnight trains, to which it is sent by a special, fast express. Not a copy of that edition is sold at the depots or elsewhere in the city, for reasons which need not here be given. Excepting the packages for the trains, not a copy of that edition is allowed to be taken from the press room, and not long since the pressman refused a dollar for a single copy. The Watchman evidently desired to create an impression that this edition of the Press is newsless but any one who chooses to examine it will find it full of news—in fact it has every thing except the very latest local and telegraphic matter, and it evidently is appreciated, as the increasing demand for it in certain localities will testify.

This issue in advance of other morning papers serves a double purpose: first, its readers in towns at a reasonable distance from Philapelphia, get the most important news at as early an hour as city subscribers; second, subscribers at a greater distance receive the Press about six hours in advance of any other Philadelphia papers.

This is a piece of enterprise that should not be allowed to suffer from the untruthful attacks of any journal—the Watchman, f'instance.

—A letter is published which the Duke of Cumberland wrote to the Emperor William on the death of his father. It announces that he will bear the titles of Duke of Cumberland, Duke of Brunswick and Luneburg, because obstacles exist affecting his rights to the Kingdom of Hanover; but he formally maintains all the rights and titles his father possessed. It seems by this that this Dutchman is determined to hold on to all the rights which descended to him from his father. Now he is just the same kind of a plucky Dutchman that Sechler is. Sechler & Co. are still selling goods in the Bush House Block, and are determined to maintain the right which they have always held—of selling the very best goods in the market at the lowest possible price. Go to Sechler's for your meat and groceries, and you will be sure of getting the best in the market.

—Col. Burchfield, of Altoona, commander of the 5th regiment, N. G., to which Co. B, of this place, belongs, arrived in town Tuesday morning. The Colonel is a printer by trade, holding the position of foreman in the Altoona Tribune office.

—Merchants who are receiving fall and winter goods should advertise in the REPUBLICAN. Let the people know what you have behind the counters and on the shelves. Advertise!

—"A teacher who will preserve order or break heads," is advertised for by a Kansas School Board. Here is a chance for an energetic Centre countian. Don't all speak at once.

—The Poor Overseer's expenses for the city of Lock Haven, during the month of October, amounted to $203.-81. Number of persons relieved, 156; tramps fed, 9; deaths, 1.

—"Bulldozing" in Centre county is the latest phantom before the eyes of the opposition. What a ghostly set of politicians the defeated side usually turns out to be.

—If any of our lady readers have dresses, shawls, or any article of apparel which they wish to have colored, send them to Mrs. W. E. Shope, on Harrison avenue.

—The Snow Shoe railroad company are contracting for a considerable number of ties.

The following is the vote cast for the Prohibition ticket:—Governor, Lane, 3653; Lieutenant Governor, Shallcross, 3714; Secretary of Internal Affairs, Parsons, 3657.

An Honest Confession is Good for the Soul.

The following paragraph from the Reading Eagle, (Dem.) is worthy of perusal at this particular time:

We do not place implicit confidence in the stories which come to us from South Carolina. No doubt they are exaggerated, but the evidence is conclusive that there was a certain amount of "bull-dozing" before the election, and a good deal of mean, contemptible cheating at the ballot-boxes. The Democratic organs will not give this news to their readers, and the Republican organs will not give anything on the other side, but the fact is that the chivalry of South Carolina swindled the poor negro voters by as mean methods as ever a lying knave invented to cheat his betters. The idiots who thought they were doing something smart by stuffing the ballot-boxes for the purpose of defrauding their political opponents were really working in the interests of a higher law, which, because of their infamy, promises to keep South Carolina poor and powerless. The honest Democrats, who are Democrats because they believe in Democratic principles, have no worse enemies than these ignorant, cruel bull-dozers and sneaking swindlers who made South Carolina "solid." Every Democratic vote made by such methods in the South makes two Republican votes in the great, free, growing and prosperous North, and the States that fail to protect their citizens will languish in poverty and ignorance while the Great Republic presses forward to its high destiny. Democrats were sensitive on the subject of "bulldozing" in Reading. What do they think of it in South Carolina, supplemented by swindling of the very worst character?

HONEY!—Why it is the purest sweet in the world. It is, and has been, used in the healing art, to the satisfaction of thousands, who can say ought of white, beautiful honey, gathered from the countless thousands of the splendid flowers that adorn our fields and gardens. HOREHOUND! What mother lives that is not acquainted with its virtues in banishing Coughs and Colds from the family; why it is so well known that every candy shop would lose its custom unless horehound candy occupied a place, and the most prominent position in every show case. TAR looks black, and ladies raise their skirt for fear of getting their clothes soiled; yet it is the vegetable production of the beautiful pine tree that grows in our southern forests; and by the aid of chemistry it is found to contain medical qualities universally admitted by physicians of the highest standing. Its preserving qualities are well understood by every shipowner; and when contagion, disease and death infect their vessels they fumigate the polluted ship from stem to stern with tar, thus removing the demon of disease and death, insuring he health and life of every passenger on board. HONEY, HOREHOUND AND TAR, combined together, aided by science and the best chemical skill, form a remedy admitted by the most exerienced physicians as the best, most certain and harmless preparation every made for the radical and speedy cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Influenza and all Bronchial affections leading to Consumption, from which thousands are suffering. This valuable remedy is known as

HALE'S HONEY OF HOREHOUND AND TAR.

Charles A. Terry, a liquor merchant of Tarport, was seized by a robber, while walking home from Bradford, Thursday night last, and robbed of a few articles. He shot his assailant, but he escaped. He had $175 on his person, stowed away in his vest pocket, which the robber did not get.

A brute named Evarts, residing in Chillisgauge township, Northumberland county, with two unmarried sisters, has been arrested on a double charge of incest—both women being about to become mothers. Evarts had been confined in the penitentiary for horse stealing, and had been guilty of other crimes, but since his release, nearly a year ago, he had been living with his sisters.

Mr. Baker, of Hollisterville, Wayne county, returned from Susquehanna county a few nights ago with $3,000. During the night his outbuildings were fired. While the family, except Mrs. Baker, were endeavoring to save their property, two rough-looking men rushed in, locking the door after them. One of them dealt the frightened woman a violent blow, knocking her senseless. They then ransacked the house, finding $100. They made strong efforts to open the safe, in which were the $3,000, but were frightened away.

Cleveland Herald (Rep.)

REJOICE AND BE GLAD.—The tide has turned! The indications of the October elections are fully verified by yesterday's result. The integrity and intelligence of the country endorses the Republican party as the party of good government, sound money, honest finance, stability and progress. The Democratic party is rejected as the advocate of repudiation, the apologist of Communism and the enemy of resumption. The Greenback party disappears under the sunlight of truth like a miasmatic exaltation.

Let us rejoice and be glad! The fiat money fallacy is dispelled! The demon of repudiation is exercised! The red spectre of Communism vanishes! No one need despair of the Republic after this glorious victory.

THE following is a summary of the next Legislature:

	Rep.	Dem.	Nat.
Senate	32	16	2
House	110	76	15
	142	92	17

Being a Republican majority over all on joint ballot of 34.

TISSUE paper tickets were used down South to swell Democratic majorities.

—The 5th Regiment, N. G., will be inspected at Tyrone on the 29th inst.

—Col. D. H. Hastings was in Lock Haven last Monday on business.

Autumn poetry and opinions of eminent persons concerning yellow fever, its probable cause and certain cure, should be handed in before snow comes if intended for publication.

CONSUMPTION CURED.—An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and using, in German, French or English. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, New York. 42-4t

"YOU DON'T KNOW THEIR VALUE."—"They cured me of Ague, Biliousness and Kidney Complaint, as recommended. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls, who the doctors and neighbors said could not be cured. I am confident I should have lost both of them one night if I had not had the Hop Bitters in my house to use. I found it done them so much good I continued with it, and they are now well. That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them high enough."—B., Rochester, N. Y. 46-2t

THE SUN FOR '79.

THE SUN will be printed every day during the year to come. Its purpose and method will be the same as in the past. To present all the news in a readable shape, and to tell the truth though the heavens fall.

THE SUN has been, is, and will continue to be independent of everybody and everything save the Truth and its own convictions of duty. That is the only policy which an honest newspaper need have. This is the policy which has won for this newspaper the confidence and friendship of a wider constituency than was ever enjoyed by any other American Journal.

THE SUN is the newspaper for the people. It is not for the rich man against the poor man, or for the poor man against the rich man, but seeks to do equal justice to all interests in the community. It is not an organ of any person, class, sect or party. There need be no mystery about its loves and hates. It is for the honest man against the rogues every time. It is for honest Democrat against the dishonest Republican, and for the honest Republican against the dishonest Democrat. It does not take its cue from the utterances of any politician or political organization. It gives its support unreservedly when men or measures are in agreement with the Constitution and with the principles upon which this Republic was founded, for the people. Whenever the Constitution and constitutional principles are violated—as in the outrageous conspiracy of 1876, by which a man not elected was placed in the President's office, where he still remains—it speaks out for the right That is THE SUN'S idea of independence. In this respect there will be no change in its programme for 1879.

THE SUN has fairly earned the hearty hatred of rascals, frauds, and humbugs of all sorts and sizes. It hopes to deserve that hatred not less in the year 1879, than in 1878, 1877, or any year gone by. THE SUN will continue to shine on the wicked with unmitigated brightness.

While the lessons of the past should be constantly kept before the people, THE SUN does not propose to make itself in 1879 a magazine of ancient history. It is printed for the men and women of to-day, whose concern is chiefly with the affairs of to-day. It has both the disposition and the ability to afford its readers the promptest, fullest, and most accurate intelligence of whatever in the wide world is worth attention. To this end the resources belonging to well-established prosperity will be liberally employed.

The present disjointed condition of parties in this country, and the uncertainty of the future, lend an extraordinary significance to the events of the coming year. The discussions of the press, the debates and acts of Congress, and the movements of the leaders in every section of the Republic will have a direct bearing on the Presidential election of 1880—an event which must be regarded with the most anxious interest by every patriotic American, whatever his political ideas or allegiance. To these elements of interest may be added the probability that the Democrats will control both houses of Congress, the increasing feebleness of the fraudulent Administration, and the spread and strengthening everywhere of a healthly abherence of fraud in any form. To present with accuracy and clearness the exact situation in each of its varying phases, and to expound, according to its well-known methods, the principles that should guide us through the labyrinth, will be an important part of THE SUN'S work for 1879.

We have the means of making THE SUN, as a political, a literary and a general newspaper, more entertaining and more useful than ever before; and we mean to apply them freely.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the DAILY SUN, a four page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address

A Diabolical Outrage—Desecration of the Tomb of A. T. Stewart—The Body Spirited away—Great excitement in New York—Our Political Tidal Wave—Tammany Utterly Defeated.

Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11th, 1878.

Of all foul deeds, the foulest one upon which the heavens have looked for many a day, was that discovered by the sexton of St. Mark's Church, on Tuesday morning. Upon opening the church gate, it became evident that the place had been invaded during the night. A dark lantern and a shovel lay beside a heap of freshly upturned earth, directly over the vault in which the body of the late A. T. Stewart was deposited, and a hasty examination of the premises revealed the astonishing fact that the body of the late millionaire had been removed.

The startling intelligence was at once sent to the police headquarters, and Commissioner Nichols, in company with ex-Judge Hilton, (the present head of the house of A. T. Stewart & Co.,) proceeded to the spot, where it was found that one of the three stones which covered the opening of the desecrated vault, was out of place. A small aperture about twenty-five inches square was thus made, and through it the thieves must have crept to effect their nefarious work. The vault occupies a commanding position, being in the centre of the churchyard which fronts on Second avenue. Three large trees toss their huge branches ever the tomb, and their dark shadows afforded protection to the six men who must have been concerned in the robbery. The vault is constructed of brick, and is arched at the top. The floor is twelve feet below the surface of the ground, and a granite stone staircase leads to the bottom of the vault, which is a room eight by ten feet. When Mr. Stewart's body was placed there on the 15th of April, 1876, it had three receptacles: first, a coffin of oak, covered with velvet cloth, then a leaden case, hermetically sealed, and lastly a heavy cedar box.

The thieves, after unscrewing the lid of the outer box, cut open the leaden case which enclosed the casket, with a knife, showing that the work was not done by professionals who would have brought the ever-present "jimmy" into play.

The leaden case once cut through, the removal of the body was only the work of a moment. At first thought it seems almost incredible that such an act could be successfully and secretly accomplished in so public and exposed a place as St. Mark's Church-yard; but the explanatory circumstance is that the beat covered by the policeman on Second Avenue, extends half a mile above and below the scene of the robbery, giving ample time for the thieves to lift the body of Mr. Stewart from the vault, place it in some suitable receptacle, carry it across the church-yard, and lift it over the high iron fence into a wagon.

In looking about for a motive for this outrage, that which stands out in greatest prominence is—reward for the recovery of the body. Judge Hilton declares that no reward whatever will be offered, and how the wretched matter will end is past finding out until some new light is thrown on the subject. There has been a prevailing idea that a great quantity of gold and valuables was buried with the body, and since the discovery of loss, it has come out that about a month ago the sexton discovered that the marble slab at the head of the vault had been tampered with, and to deceive any person intending to rob the grave, this slab was moved about twenty-five feet from the true entrance.

This shocking occurrence has excited universal and deep indignation not only against the criminals but against the police authorities. The latter cannot ignore the popular feeling, and this circumstance, together with the prominence of the outraged family, has incited them to great activity. Every available detective is employed on the case and the scene at police headquarters is one of much excitement. The nature of the object stolen renders its successful concealment next to impossible and the arrest of the ghouls in human form is almost hourly expected. It will go hard with them if caught; for the necessity of making an example of them is only too evident. As Mr. William Libby (Mr. Stewart's partner) exclaimed on learning of the robbery: "It is atrocious, diabolical! A city in which even the dead are not permitted to rest is a good city to get away from. There does not seem to be any protection."

It was the intention of the family to remove Mr. Stewart's remains to a final resting place in the magnificent mausoleum now building at Carden City, Long Island, and should they be recovered, this disposition will probably be made of them.

With the usual noisy demonstrations about the polling places, and the flashing of calcium lights around the offices in "Newspaper Square" political parties have met, fought and disbanded, with no one killed, if I except one poor fellow who hung himself in the cellar of his nouse upon hearing of Tammany's defeat. He had been promised a position in case of its success, and he couldn't stand up under his disappointment.

Yes, Tammany Hall which ever since Tweed's time has stood, among the thoroughly honest men of all parties, as a synonym for political trickery and corruption, has at last been overthrown, vanished, "burst-ed." As Sachem Kelly announced to a sorrowing crowd of repeaters on election night, he was "routed all along the line." During this contest, party lines were for a time forgotten in the general determination to get out from under the heel of Tammany. Tammany, in turn, nerved to the desperate endeavors by this unwonted opposition, centered its energies on the one task of electing its mayor, Augustus Schell, careless of what should become of the rest of its ticket. But it was of no avail. New York had made up its mind. Edward Cooper received nearly twenty thousand majority, and John Kelley has gone to meet Ben Butler. This result is very gratifying, if for no other reason than that it shows that this city is neither disfranchised nor sunk in apathy. But, on the other hand, it will not do to crow too loudly before we are out of the woods. Tammany is both subtle and powerful, and there have been such things known as its getting hold of opposition candidates after the election of the latter, and quietly leading them into the Wigwam. We must wait and see whether it will succeed in capturing Mr. Cooper.

RADIX.

Beaconsfield's Devotion to His Wife.

Disraeli has always sought fortune in the higher sense of glory and fame; and when it has come to him as pelf it has been by the pure favor of the goddess and not by his own exertions. His lifelong devotion to his wife would be enough to prove, were any one impertinent enough to doubt it, that her jointure was not her attraction in his eyes. "They was like a pair of turtle doves, they was," says the head gardener as he shows you through the shrubberies, cultivated by her constant care to suit her husband's taste. "They was like that to the last day of their lives. They would spend whole days out here together in the summer time, and it was her delight to take him to see things which she had done to please him unbeknown. If she thought he'd like to have a clear view of the meadow, she'd have openings cut in the woods. She used to tell me to do it on the quiet, and when it was all done she'd lead him to the spot. Do you see that monument yonder on the hill? Well, it's put up in memory of my lord's father, him that wrote the book; and my lady did it of her own accord. She had the plans made and set the masons to work without sayin' a word to him about it; and then she takes him out one fine afternoon, and says he 'What's that?' 'Let's go see,' says she with a smile; and when they got near it he stood and looked at her for a full minute without speakin' a word. I've heerd as how he cried, but not havin' been near enough to see it, I can't say. It was the finished monnyment to Isaac Disraeli, Sr., fit for Westminister Abbey. She loved Isaac Disraeli's son like that."

As you listen to this you cannot but call to mind many another story on the same subject equally to the point. Only one need be told. Entering her brougham with him one night to drive down to the house for a great debate, Mrs. Disraeli had her finger nearly crushed by the slamming of the door. Mr. Disraeli did not notice the accident in his intense preoccupation of mind, and she made the really heroic resolution that he should not hear of it till he had left the house. He ran over the points of his speech to her, and she listened, only diverting her attention for a moment to make sure that the mutilated finger was well out of sight in the folds of her mantle. She knew that if he had seen it his all powerful aid in the debate would have been lost to his party for the night.

Edgar A. Poe's Bones.

A St. Louis gentleman, known as a writer, has just returned from Baltimore, bringing with him the stone which marked the grave of Edgar A. Poe before the remains of the poet were removed to their present resting place beneath a monument, and also a part of the coffin containing them. The relics were obtained from the sexton who had charge of the removal of the body, and a curious interview was had with him. The sexton was asked what was the condition of Poe's body when the grave was opened—what it looked like. The answer revealed a curious fact not heretofore made public. The sexton said that all that remained of the body was a skeleton, tolerably well preserved, "and," he added, "when the head was moved the brain rattled around inside just like a lump of dirt." His idea was that the brain of Poe had dried into a ball, which rolled about in the cavity. The stone brought to St. Louis is a small sandstone slab, with a number on it to designate the occupant of the grave, and stood over Poe's coffin for years. The wood of the coffin is, of course, somewhat decayed. It has been suggested that the relics would form a desirable addition to the collection of the St. Louis Mercantile Library, and it is possible that they may be donated that institution.

This is the real English style of paragraphing: "The Ameer (a mere) will be subdewed (ued) unless thro' the (Am(ere)cerest trifle. The gov-(urn)ernment may have ment (meant) well, but it should take some of the Ameer's soldiers and urn (that is bury, the old-fashioned coffins being urns) them."

How Thomas Betrayed Himself.

When Thomas drove up to deliver the usual quart of mixture the gentleman of the house kindly inquired:

"Thomas, how many quarts of milk do you deliver?"

"Ninety-one, sir!"

"And how many cows have you?"

"Nine, sir."

The gentleman made some remarks about an early spring, close of the Eastern war, and the state of the roads, and then asked:

"Say, Thomas, how much milk per day do your cows average?"

"Seven quarts, sir."

"Ah! um!" said the gentleman, as he moved off.

Thomas looked after him, scratched his head, and all at once grew pale, as he pulled out a short pencil and began to figure on the wagon cover.

"Nine cows is nine, and I set down seven quarts under the cows, and multinly. That's sixty-three quarts of milk. I told him I sold ninety-one quarts per day. Sixty-three from ninety-one leaves twenty-eight, and none to carry. Now where do I get the rest of the milk! I'll be hanged if I haven't given myself away to one of my best customers by leaving a durned big cavity in these figures to be filled with water!"

TO ADVERTISERS.

George P. Rowell & Co.'s
SELECT LIST
—OF—
LOCAL NEWSPAPERS.

Many persons suppose this list to be composed of Cheap, low-priced newspapers. The fact is quite otherwise. The Catalogue states exactly what the papers are. When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST paper in the place. When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. When printed in roman letters it is neither the best nor the only paper, but is usually a very good one, notwithstanding. The list gives the population of every town, and the circulation of every paper. It is not a CO-OPERATIVE LIST. It is not a CHEAP LIST. At the foot of the catalogue for each State the important towns which are not covered by the list are enumerated. It is an HONEST LIST. The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publisher's schedule. The price for one inch four weeks in the entire list is $635. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $3,136 35. The list includes 970 newspapers, of which 163 are issued daily and 807 weekly. They are located in 825 different cities and towns, of which 22 are State Capitals, 328 places of over 5,000 population, and 444 County Seats. Lists sent on application. Address GEO. P. Out Again.

Snow Shoe engine, No. 4, (the one that went down in the Miller's Spring wreck) came out of the round house last Thursday morning, looking as bright as a new pin, and consequently all the better for having taken such a tumble. It has been thoroughly overhauled, repainted and new additions made. The passenger car that went down in the big wreck above referred to was also brought out that morning. Inside and out it presents a new and attractive appearance, little resembling its former self. The work upon the engine and car is the result of Bellefonte talent, and argues well for good taste and judgment. The job was under the control of Master Mechanic H. D. Landis, than whom no better workman can be found in these diggings.

Last Saturday a trial trip was made over the road with the recently reconstructed locomotive and passenger car. Supt. Rhoads, Civil Engineer Butts, Master Mechanic Landis and James Sommerville, Esq., accompanied the train, and they all expressed themselves as satisfied with the result. William H. Bing, engineer, run the train over the road, and everything worked charmingly under his management. George Weaver played the part of "coal heaver." At Snow Shoe, William Temple, the engineer who will be remembered as having stood at his post when the machine made the big leap, took charge, and run the party out to the mines and back. He handled his old companion with much tenderness and consideration.

—It was a former Bellefonte lad who went to the depot, less than a thousand years ago, to see his sweetheart pass through. The moment the train came to a standstill our friend jumped aboard and greeted his Maria Ann, planting upon her rosy cheek a smacking kiss. It so happened that the girl's paternal guardian of the feminine gender accompanied her, and could you imagine the astonishment of the young man when the old lady sung out: "Can't you kiss your mother, too?" To refuse would seem cruel; to consent, abashing. However, to please the old lady, and cast bread upon the water that would return many days hence, he embraced his future mother-in-law with due fervor. To add additional fuel to the fire, he saluted a younger sister in the above manner, and then stole away to compute his gains and count the loss.

—The United German Savings bank of Baltimore on the 8th suspended payments, requiring thirty days' notice from its depositors. A run on the bank was the cause. The president says that notwithstanding the thirty days' requirement, it will resume payments on sight within two weeks. Its deposits are stated at $128,000, its nominal assets are $212,000, "of which $132,000, are good." There is one institution in this place that never fails. This is Sechler & Co's store. It never fails to furnish the greatest amount of pure, fresh groceries for the least amount of money.

—The Lock Haven Republican, after copying our notice of General Beaver's tour through the State during the late campaign, says: "No man made a better record at Renovo, and other points throughout the State, than Gen. Beaver, and if he has a clean record on the Curtin question his chances for recognition at the next State convention, as the Republican candidate for Governor, will be most favorable, and if nominated, his election may be considered sure and certain, for Pennsylvania has no idea of going back on the Republican party."

—The two most precious things this side of the grave are our reputation and our life. But it is to be lamented that the most contemptible whisper may deprive us of the one and the weakest weapon of the other. A wise man, therefore, will be more anxious to deserve a fair name than to possess it, and this will teach him so to live as not to be afraid to die.

—The grand jury ignored the charge of libel brought by Dr. Martin, a defeated candidate, against S. S. Seeley, editor of the Jersey Shore Herald. Col. Seeley, as a matter of course, walks out of the fight with a feather in his cap.

—W. W. Barrows, and John Cook, Esqs., of Lock Haven, came to Bellefonte last Thursday morning and went into the country to buy several teams of horses. Mr. Barrows is an extensive lumberman, and will get out 4,000,000 feet this winter.

—John C. Miller & Co. invite their friends and the public generally to call and examine the beautiful new goods being opened this week. They are pleased to show goods, whether you wish to purchase or not.

Complimentary to a Former Resident.

A correspondent of the Fairmont West Virginian writes thusly of a former townsman. Mr. Patton will be remembered as once the proprietor of the jewelry store of Frank P. Blair. The writer says: "I formed a slight acquaintance with the Marshal of West Virginia, Mr. G. W. Patton, of Charleston, Kanawha county, who is much of a gentleman, very intelligent and I suppose upon a close and mutual intimacy would be found to be social, genial and companionable. The Marshal is quite a young man, and that he holds such a high, honorable and responsible position under the government must be to him and his friends a gratifying acknowledgement and endorsement of his fitness morally, intellectually and politically. He has no concealment to make of his political principles—being a dyed-in-the-wool Republican. His father was a printer and editor, and he himself is a typo. He has the chance to make himself immensely popular with the editors and printers of the State, and they may aspire to put him on the State ticket for Gubernatorial honors some time in the future.

"The Marshal is a practical man, and entertains, as I think, the very sensible idea, with the concurrence of Secretary Sherman, of paying out specie at the spring terms of the United States Courts. This idea should be adopted and acted upon by the Secretary and all the Marshals of the States. It would be a mighty stride towards specie payments, and pretty generally distribute the precious metals and eventually stop the senseless cry for greenbacks without a gold and silver base for them. Give us a solid and sure foundation in gold and silver, and then issue the desired greenbacks that cannot depreciate and bring further distress and ruin upon labor and every other interest of the country. I should have no objection to drawing a 'bar'l' of the Marshal's shiners as soon as possible."

A Painful Accident.

—On Monday of last week a young man named Joseph McMonigal, of Taylor township, met with a painful accident while at work for Emanuel Downing, of Half Moon. McMonigal, with a companion, was engaged at husking corn. The boys had their guns with them, and sometime during the day were using them. McMonigal had an old army rifle, and the percussion cap would not fit. The other young man stood behind McMonigal, with his gun thrown over his arm, putting on a cap, in doing which the hammer slipped, and the gun went off. The contents struck McMonigal in the back as he was rising from a stooping position. At last accounts the injured lad was thought to be out of danger.

—George H. Arms, who resided in Lewistown several years ago, and who will be remembered as the engineer who located the Sunbury and Lewistown railroad, died suddenly at the Parker House, Boston, on the 6th, of organic heart disease, says the Gazette. He went there saying he was very tired and felt unwell and asked for a doctor, who, after examining him, went out of the room to procure blankets and hot water. He then laid down to sleep, with his hands under his head, and a few minutes after was discovered by a waiter to be dead.

—Several of the teeth of a wooden mortise wheel at the water works were broken out last Thursday forenoon. This will probably result in the result in the purchase of a new water wheel and pump. The present pump has a capacity of only forty gallons per minute, while a new one would force nearly one hundred gallons to the reservoir. To get a new rig would be economy, for the saving of fuel, machinery, etc. would soon pay for it.

—Last week we copied an item from the Watchman relating to the insanity of William Elliott, of Knoxville, Tenn. Since then we have learned of his death. Mr. Elliott was at one time a druggist in this place, went South afterward and participated with the Confederate army in the rebellion, holding an officer's commission.

—Last Wednesday evening's social hop, at the Brockerhoff House, was a complete success. Dancing commenced at nine, and the guests remained in high glee until a reasonable hour. Refreshments that would have made the eye balls of a royal Prince jingle, were served.

—Hon. James H. Osmer, formerly of this county, had a big fight to secure the nomination for Congress in the 27th district, but his friends hereabouts will be glad to know that he was elected. Mr. Osmer is a Republican.

—John C. Miller & Co. are now receiving the largest stock of holiday goods ever brought to this city.

The Media Academy for Boys and Young Men.

We are indebted to Mr. Swithin C. Shortlidge, of Media, Pa., for a descriptive catalogue and beautiful stereoscopic view of the Media Academy for boys and young men, of which Mr. Shortlidge is principal. Media is a delighful town of about two thousand inhabitants, situated twelve miles from Philadelphia, on the West Chester and Philadelphia railroad. It is handsomely laid out, contains many fine buildings, chiefly of brick and stone, and is particularly noted for the absence of drinking saloons and drunkenness, the town charter prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its limits.

Mr. Shortlidge is a brother of our fellow-townsman, William Shortlidge, Esq., and is a graduate of Harvard University. He is aided in his labors by a very able corps of assistants, among whom we notice Mr. W. P. Hammond, professor of penmanship and book-keeping, author of the Potter & Hammond system of penmanship and book-keeping, and others eminently qualified to fill the positions which they occupy.

During our brief sojourn in Philadelphia, a short time since, we had the pleasure of visiting the Media Academy, and of partaking of the genial hospitality of Mr. Shortlidge, thus affording us a good opportunity of noting the superior methods employed in the instruction of its pupils in all that is gentlemanly in deportment and in intellectual advancement. This Academy has received many flattering annotations from the press, and from eminent gentlemen whose sons have received the benefits of its teachings, and we have not the slightest hesitancy in adding our testimony to the rest: It is an admirably conducted institution, and, so far as we were able to discern, nothing is lacking in the management to place it among the foremost of this class of American academies.

—All our friends in the country or in the town who would like to have their old clothes brightened up would do well to call upon Mrs. W. E. Shope, on Harrison Avenue. These are hard times, and we must all economise. "Economy is wealth," and how better can we save and at the same time put on a respectable appearance then by having our old clothes brightened up with new and fresh colors. Then, Mrs. Shope is one of the very best hands at this business. Many parties have from time to time sent their work to other parties and had it spoilt, and finally been compelled to take it to Mrs. Shope to be done up in shape, and they always found her equal to the emergency. She understands this business better than any other person in this county, and as well as any other person in the State, See her advertisement in another column.

—A sumptuous supper, of a non-partizan character, was given at Howard last Wednesday night in honor of Hon. Seth H. Yocum's election to Congress. The feast was served at the Howard House, John H. Weaver, proprietor, and said to have been first-class. Mr. Yocum, unavoidably, was absent. Addresses by D. S. Dunham, D. H. Hastings, and John G. Love, Esqs., were made.

—The Logan Fire Company will hold its regular meeting to-morrow (Thursday) night. A full attendance is desired. The Logan boys are making an endeavor to procure a number of newspapers and periodicals for their rooms, in order that something like a reading room may be established. This is a move in the right direction, and we wish the company much success.

—Mr. William Speer, one of the members of the Farnsworth governor firm, is at present in Council Bluffs, Iowa, where, we understand, he has purchased several lots for building purposes, and where he intends moving sometime soon. Bellefonte will be sorry to lose so enterprising a citizen.

—The ballast train of the B. E. V. R. R. passed along the line and delivered a quantity of bituminous coal at each station. The train reached Bellefonte shortly after dinner, yesterday and unloaded a large amount of fuel at the depot.

—The peculiarity about the A. S. T. Co. black tip is that children's fine shoes, to which they are applied, not only wear twice as long, but they realy add to the beauty and finish of the finest shoe. 46-4t

—A Bellefonter, Mr. Wm. Speer, had the misfortune to have his pocket picked of some twenty-five dollars while on the cars somewhere between Pittsburgh and Chicago.

—The curbing along Allegheny street, below the Brockerhoff House alley, has been repaired.

A Lock Haven Family Wined Out.

The Altoona Tribune, of a recent date, published an item of news that read in this wise: "In the fall of 1877 a man named Clayton left Lock Haven for the far West. He located at Sapper creek, Decatur county, Kansas, where he erected a cabin and laid the foundation of what he supposed would, some time in the future, be a home for his family, consisting of a wife, son and daughter. Last spring the latter joined him in his prairie home, and toiled with him until recently to make the 'wilderness blossom as the rose.' All progressed promisingly with them until about a month ago, when the savages of the plains made a raid upon the homestead, murdering the father and husband, the wife and the daughter, nine years old. The cabin was burned, and the remains of the father consumed therein; the mother was shot through the shoulder and the daughter in the back. The son, Henry H. Clayton, aged eighteen years, was absent at the time of the massacre, working for a farmer, and thus escaped a like horrible fate. When he returned home the next day after the terrible tragedy, he was horrified at the fearful work of the savages, found his mother and sister some distance from the dreadful scene, and buried them with the charred bones of his father. The place had no further charms for him, and he resolved to return to the home of his childhood."

The Tribune said the young man referred to passed through Altoona on his way to Lock Haven, where he intended to reside with an uncle. The Lock Haven Journal, after, as it alleges, diligent search, failed to find Clayton, and concludes that the Tribune story was untrue. The latter paper on Monday respectfully asks the Journal to try it again, and inquire among the Bowers families in that neighborhood.

A Freak in Advertising.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writes from London as follows: In Paris, last summer, I saw a friend of mine who had just come over, using a pen of peculiar construction, designed with special reference to those untidy persons who, like myself, ink their fingers when they write. Now, my friend is a man whose hands are as white as lillies, with finger nails like rosebuds in tint; noticeable hands, even remarkable, considering that he is an elderly man, and one who occasionally helps with the lighter work on his farm in Nebraska. Catch him inking his fingers!

"Why, where did you get that nice pen?" I asked him, a blissful exemption from an uninked middle finger opening on my joyous, expectant mind.

"In Omaha," he answered. "It's the nicest thing; I used to ink my fingers before I got it."

He did! He inked his fingers! That was enough for me. I got the name of the merchant from whom he bought the pen, the price of it, and, enclosing the money, I sent from Paris to Omaha for that pen.

By the last steamer it came to me. There had been a little delay. The stationer at Omaha was out of them, but he sent up to Sioux City to the man that advertises them for another lot. And now here is where the laugh comes in. The pens are an English invention, and tons of them can be bought in London, if desired. At the stationer's, next door, I could have got what I had sent after to Sioux City. But how could I know that? I dealt with the man that advertised.

—There is such a thing as aiding local manufacturing institutions by giving them your support. However small the piece of work you may have done, it is something. In the aggregate, these odds and ends amount to considerable, and eventually form an important factor in the life of the institution. In and around Bellefonte are several manufacturing establishments of no mean reputation. The owners have struggled along, amid almost insurmountable difficulties, and deserve our thanks for employing men who would otherwise be idle, and consequently a burden upon the borough. Take for example, the firm of W. P. Duncan & Co., who, through the long years of financial distress, have kept above water. This firm is now employing twenty persons, but have room for fifteen more. A specialty in their line of manufacture is the Turbine Water wheel, many of which they have sold in every part of the country. A number are doing service in Georgia, Missouri, and other far-away States. If anybody in this section is in need of a good, serviceable water wheel, get it of this firm. It will benefit you in the end.

—Mr. S. M. Killough, agent of the Philadelphia Record, the cheapest morning paper in the country, is in Bellefonte.

Information Wanted.

My husband, John F. Cochran, left his home in September last, 1877, to go to Lock Haven to transact some business with Mr. George Kesler, tanner at Lock Haven, since which time nothing has been heard of him. Said Cochran was five feet eight inches tall; had dark brown hair; one front tooth gone; grey eyes, one of them blind; weighed about 130 pounds; was about thirty years of age. Anybody giving any information of his whereabouts will be thankfully received by his wife.

NEVER RETURN.—It is said that one out of every four real invalids who go to Denver, Col., to recover health, never return to the East or South except as a corpse. The undertakers, next to the hotel keepers, have the most profitable business. This excessive mortality may be prevented and patients saved and cured under the care of friends and loved ones at home, if they will but use Hop Bitters in time. This we know. Bellefonte Markets.

BELLEFONTE, Nov. 20, 1878.

From what we can learn from those who travel from town to town soliciting merchants to buy goods, we are glad to know that Bellefonte does more substantial business than any other town of its size in the interior of the State. Last Saturday was a busy day at the stores of our leading merchants.

FLOUR.—The price is steady, and the demand limited.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR.—The price of buckwheat flour varies from 75 cents per sack on the street to $1.25 per sack from store.

WHEAT.—There is very little wheat changing hands. The price is so low that farmers are disposed to hold as long as they can.

CORN.—New cob corn is in fair request, and the price should stimulate farmers to sell if they have it to spare. Fifty cents per bushel of ears now is more than equivalent to sixty cents for shelled dry corn, which can now be brought here from the West at fifty to fifty-three cents per bushel by the car load. The farmer who refuses fifty cents for his cob corn now will miss his calculation.

RYE.—A small amount moving round in a liquid state.

OATS.—We don't hear much said about oats since the election. Some of the candidates, as well as their horses, felt their oats prior to that eventful day, since which it seems to be flat at the market price.

BEEF.—Owing to the mild weather, there has been very little beef offered, which has been of very poor quality. It is true the price is low, but the standard in quality is as low as the price.

PORK.—There has been no deliveries reported during the week.

POTATOES.—Potatoes continue scarce, which retail at 90 cents per bushel from store.

APPLES.—Apples are in full supply at various prices.
